Setting public policy priorities

GE Aerospace engages in public policy discussions that impact our Company, our workers, and our communities. We approach public policy through education, engagement, involvement, and thought leadership. Each year, GE Aerospace evaluates public policy priorities for the upcoming year. Our team reviews a number of factors, including the potential reputational effects and risks associated with pursuing or not pursuing a particular priority.

Working globally, nationally, and locally

GE Aerospace works to promote public policy issues in areas such as aviation safety, international trade, tax, cybersecurity, and government procurement. We are committed to engaging with governments—globally, nationally, and locally—through constructive dialogue, promotion of innovative public policy ideas, and investments in solutions that help address the fundamental challenges of our industry. We support public policies that promote open markets, technology, and innovation.

GE Aerospace's Board of Directors believes that it is in the best interest of GE Aerospace's stakeholders to promote sound public policies at the international, national, and local levels. To that end, our Government Relations and broader Corporate Affairs teams work with the Company's business teams to regularly assess our legislative and regulatory priorities. The businesses provide input on the appropriate advocacy plan or strategy for achieving a successful outcome—including whether GE Aerospace should advocate for a priority directly or through one of its trade associations or industry coalitions. In the latter case, GE Aerospace can help facilitate coordination with other companies with similar priorities. In evaluating public policy priorities for an upcoming year, the Government Relations team works with GE Aerospace's senior management to review the potential reputational consequences and risks of pursuing or not pursuing a priority. We set priorities to increase shareholder value and advance broader public policy imperatives.
